

Teach First

Our social impact partnership is helping to increase the placement and training of STEM (science, technology, engineering & maths) teachers with a particular community focus of supporting schools close to our site in Capenhurst and head office. It is estimated more than 12,000 secondary school pupils will be impacted through our involvement.

Teach First is an education charity fighting to make the education system work for every child. Since 2002 it has trained and placed talented teachers in schools serving disadvantaged communities - getting great teachers into the classrooms that need them most, supporting more than one million children. As a leading teacher training provider, operating in all regions of England, it champions schools facing the biggest challenges by developing school leaders and plugging them into supportive networks, so that schools and pupils can thrive.

To date, over 100 ambassadors (teachers who have completed one of the Teach First programmes) have gone on to become head teachers and thousands are now school leaders. More than 60% of their 16,000 ambassadors are still working in schools serving disadvantaged communities.

Urenco is partnering with Teach First to unlock the potential in future generations.

“ We are delighted that Urenco is continuing its commitment to support STEM education through Teach First, an established and respected route to encourage and develop a more diverse and inclusive pipeline of future STEM professionals.

Through your social impact Teach First will be able to train and develop twenty new STEM teachers over the next year, impacting over two and a half thousand pupils, as well as creating opportunities to engage with schools through coaching and virtual question and answer sessions. This is in addition to around fifty STEM teachers Urenco has already supported through this partnership.”
